Bengal sees sharpest rise in registered voters in border areas since 2002 SIR

RAVIK BHATTACHARYA
Kolkata, November 21

BETWEEN 2002, WHEN the Special Intensive Review (SIR) was last conducted by the Election Commission of India, and 2025, West Bengal has seen a 66% increase in the number of registered voters — from 45.8 million to 76.3 million. Eighteen districts that comprised the state then, and ECI data shows that of the top 10 that showed the highest increase in the number of voters, nine districts border Bangladesh.

The SIR is currently underway across West Bengal's 23 districts were carved into smaller ones between 2002 and now.

According to data available with the ECI, the nine districts on the border that have seen an uptick are: Uttar Dinajpur (105.49% increase in number of registered voters), Malda (94.29%), Murshidabad (87.65%), South-24 Parganas (83.30%), Jalpaiguri (82.3%), Cooch Behar (76.29%), North-24 Parganas (72.18%), Nadia (71.46%) and Dakshin Dinajpur (70.94%). The only non-border district in the top 10 is Birbhum (73.44%). Kolkata was an outlier, witnessing the lowest rise in voter numbers at just 4.46%. From 2,300,871 voters in 2002, the number rose to just 2,407,145 voters.

TMC spokesperson Arup Chakrabarty said, "The sharp rise is due to Hindu refugees who have come from Bangladesh and settled in the border districts. The Hindu population in Bangladesh dropped from 23% (in 1951) to 8% (in 2022). They have not gone to China. Apart from small sections going to Assam and Tripura, the majority have come to West Bengal."

He claimed there is a false narrative being spread by the BJP of Muslim infiltration.

"Such people have settled in Cooch Behar, Alipurduar and Bongaon, where the BJP has won with their votes. In Malda and Murshidabad, there is a significant Muslim population, and we have won seats. However, our Chief Minister, Mamata Banerjee, does not believe in such religious divisions and is demanding protection for all," said Chakrabarty.

Asked about Kolkata's relatively low uptick, Chakrabarty said he isn't sure what explains the data.

Senior BJP leader and former state president Rahul Sinha called it an "alarming trend". "We have been saying this for years, and it's now being reflected in data. Seven districts bordering Bangladesh are in an alarming condition, and many are expected to become or will become Muslim-majority districts due infiltration," he alleged. "This infiltration and creation of hubs is being planned. That is why data shows an abnormally high percentage of voters as compared to 2002," he claimed.

CPM's state president and Punjab member Md Salim, told The Indian Express that the inflow from Bangladesh is definitely a factor in the rise of numbers at the border districts. "BSF should have checked this. A sizable number of Hindu refugees also came in with others, that's why the Hindu population declined in the neighbouring country," he said.

Regarding the low figures of Kolkata, Salim said there are various reasons. "Firstly, during the Left Front regime, we were able to develop small urban centres into towns. District towns were also developed. So people from villages did not directly come to Kolkata but went to these towns, like Barasat. We were able to develop rural areas. Secondly, I think a section of people have moved out of Kolkata... some may have settled in the suburbs too, if they haven't left the state. The birth rate (in Kolkata and the districts) is also a factor; it is not of a religious nature but due to backwardness."

IAMA: Draft accessibility norms to impose cost burden on OTTs

IMPLEMENTATION OF PROPOSED accessibility norms for online curated content specifically for persons with hearing and visual impairment will lead to a high cost of compliance in several cases, which may even surpass their revenue and make them commercially unsustainable, industry body IAMA said on Friday.

The information and broadcasting ministry in October floated draft accessibility standards for audio-visual content made available by publishing or online curated content (OTT platforms) to ensure that such content is accessible to persons with hearing and visual impairment. The focus of these guidelines is not only on the content but also on the information and other support needed by persons with disabilities to enjoy such content.

The Internet and Mobile Association of India (IAMA) said that the proposed guidelines by the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting (MIB), could severely affect regional and smaller OTT platforms, owing to the extensive operational, technical, and financial obligations they are likely to impose.

Familiar crisis at COP30 as nations reject...

IN ORDER to ensure that these issues do not become a roadblock to progress on the other items on the agenda, COP30 presidency Brazil had conducted several rounds of consultations on these difficult issues, and had planned a separate outcome document addressing each of these issues.

"Two of the issues were dear to the developing countries including India, while the other two were being pushed largely by the developed world. The four issues included the demand of the developing countries regarding full implementation of the finance provision contained in Article 9.1 of the Paris Agreement. These countries claimed that this particular provision had been ignored till now. Their other concern, voiced repeatedly by India and China, was related to trade measures like Carbon Border Adjustment Mechanism (CBAM) imposed by the European Union. These countries argued that CBAM was an unilateral and discriminatory trade practice disguised as climate action. The developed countries had been asking for raising of mitigation ambition in pursuance of the 1.5 degree Celsius target mentioned in the Paris Agreement. Their other issue related to greater transparency in reporting of climate actions.

Weaved into these four broad issues were demands for a road map on phase-out of fossil fuels and a tripling of adaptation finance. The draft text that emerged on Friday addressed most of these issues in any concrete manner. It completely avoided any mention of fossil fuel phase-out, and proposed a two-year work programme on climate finance to discuss all matters related to finance, including Article 9.1, which was basically kicking the can further down the road.

On unilateral trade measures, the draft said that the countries agreed that responses to climate change must not constitute a means of "arbitrary or unjustifiable discrimination or a disguised restriction on international trade" and proposed further discussions on different platforms on this issue.

The draft political package was rejected almost immediately by the group that had been pushing for inclusion of a language on fossil fuel phase-out. Their representative Colombia called a press conference to announce that the draft package was unacceptable to it. Colombian Environment Minister Irene Velez Torres told reporters that the problem was "the methodology of consensus." Any decision at COP meeting can only be arrived through consensus, which means nothing is agreed till everyone agrees.

"The problem right now is this methodology of consensus, because this (process of) consensus has turned into a veto. And what is being left aside (as a result) is the ambitious agenda. The most ambitious agenda has been eliminated. Veto is what is happening here," Torres said. A deal could on the last day of the COP meeting is nothing unusual. In fact, it is a familiar setting at every COP meeting as countries try to trash out last-minute compromises to get to a final deal. In the process, the end decisions inevitably are extremely watered down versions of the demands that countries started out with.

Like almost every other meeting before it, COP30 is also set to get extended, with negotiators expected to work through the night to come up with another draft that can be agreeable to everyone.
